

Japan's G20 policy proposals provide early look at global priorities

Dozens of policy proposals generated by international think tanks involved in Think20 (T20) Japan are now available to the public on the G20 Insights platform.

The 102 policy proposals to be discussed by G20 leaders in Osaka, Japan in June are now available to download on the Global Solutions Initiative's G20 Insights platform.

These recommendations were prepared by T20 Japan, the G20's research and policy advice network, and cover 10 task force areas: sustainable development, infrastructure finance, financial architecture, trade and investment, climate change, future of work and education, social cohesion and the future of politics, SME policy and policies for aging populations.

"It is a privilege for the Global Solutions Initiative to support the T20 process year after year, helping generate recommendations and promote interactions with G20 policymakers, and thereby contribute toward making the T20 an intellectual backbone for the G20," said Professor Dennis J. Snower, President of the Global Solutions Initiative.

Ahead of the G20 meeting, these proposals will undergo a final review at the T20 Summit in Tokyo this month.

About the Global Solutions Initiative

The Global Solutions Initiative aims to find transnationally cooperative solutions to transnational problems by advising and supporting the G20's agenda setting with research-based solutions.

The Initiative also hosts the Global Solutions Summit in Berlin, an annual event associated with the rotating T20/G20 Presidency. The Summit brings together renowned researchers, leading policymakers, business leaders, and international policy experts ahead of the T20/G20 summits. It is here that they pool their experience and know-how to craft proposals for the T20, addressing the world's urgent political, environmental and societal problems. The next Global Solutions Summit will be on April 20-21, 2020.

Media Contact

Christine Coester Tel. +49 (0) 152 56384827

press@global-solutions.international